

Center for Financial Training & Education Alliance Announces New Executive Director

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

New Gloucester, ME - April 16, 2018: The Center for Financial Training & Education Alliance (CFTEA), a continuing education non-profit organization that offers nationally recognized diplomas and certificates throughout Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Virginia, announces the selection of Andrew Lederer as Executive Director. CFTEA is committed to offering continuing education programs for professional development in partnership with financial organizations and their employees.

Lederer comes to CFTEA with over fifteen years of experience working as an instructional member in the financial industry while developing strong working relationships by partnering with financial institutions and the community. He has worked with CFTEA for over a decade as a volunteer board member and instructor. Recently, he has worked on senior management, overseeing human resources, operations, volunteering and resource development - where strong efficiencies have been developed through a collaborative, formalized process management approach while maintaining a high level of customer service.

A native of Maine, Lederer has gained degrees in applied science and advanced process management certifications from Boston University, as well as graduation from Innovation and Leadership from the Disney Institute. With significant experience in higher education, for profit and non-profit organizations and process management, Lederer will advance the agency's current strategic plan and guide CFTEA's future contributions for developing leaders in financial institutions.

"I am honored and humbled to serve CFTEA members in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Virginia in this time of advancing technology. We are poised to support generations of leaders in a rapidly changing landscape. It is exciting to be alive at a time when the power of collaboration, connection and community provides a rich and lasting learning environment."
